A North Dakota woman told a local radio station that on Halloween she will give children she considers obese a sternly worded letter for their parents along with candy.

The woman, who gave her name only as "Cheryl," said she would still hand out candy but planned to give some trick-or-treaters a sealed envelope with a letter for their parents, she said Tuesday in a call to a radio station in Fargo.

"I am not denying any of the kids candy," she said, according to a recording of the radio show. "I am just hoping the parents are going to read this and think about it while they watch their kids get into bigger and bigger sizes of clothes."

"As far as we know, Cheryl is a local Fargo woman that thinks it is her mission to watch out for the overweight children of Fargo," radio host Corey Schaffer said Wednesday.

Schaffer, who goes by Zero as a host of the Y94 show, said the woman exchanged emails with the station for a couple of days and was scheduled in advance to call in Tuesday.

Schaffer said Cheryl's Halloween plan has sparked some "nasty, nasty responses."

Among the responses was "Ready, Eggs, FIRE." Others suggested she pass out healthier treats or not answer her door.

“Your child is, in my opinion, moderately obese and should not be consuming sugar and treats to the extent of some children this Halloween season.

My hope is that you will step up as a parent and ration candy this Halloween and not allow your child to continue these unhealthy eating habits.”

This goes out to the lonely boys

Zach Stafford

redeye@tribune.com
@zachstafford

The thing about being a gay boy is that it can be lonely. Don't agree? Let's take a moment and use our imaginations for a quick exercise.

Imagine you're 13, you're a boy and you're sitting in gym class. All the boys around you are talking about Bethany and her boobs and other topics some men love to talk about. You sit there twiddling your thumbs thinking Billy's butt is actually much cuter than Bethany's. You don't contribute to the conversation. You pray they forget you're there.

Imagine walking down the hallway at school and your hips sway a little too hard. Someone yells a homophobic remark in your face. The kids around you laugh, but you act like you didn't hear. Then imagine going home after school with a black eye. When your mom asks what happened, you lie because telling the truth (that you were beaten up for being a "sissy") would risk you being pushed out of the closet too soon.

Now to add insult to injury, realize that you will deal with all of this and not be able to tell anyone for years—seemingly endless years. Feeling lonely yet?

Of course, boys who like other boys are not the only ones who deal with this type of isolation or loneliness in the world just for being themselves. However, I was one of these boys, so I like to talk about them the most. And now I have an anthology called "Boys" that allows them to tell their own stories—some similar to the one above, others very different.

While working on this book, which I co-edited and curated, I spent months meeting and talking with boys all over the world: boys in Mexico, boys in California, even boys who actually lived just a few blocks from me in Chicago. I got to hear tales filled with love and anger, regret and despair, hope and sometimes hopelessness. But most importantly, I got to hear the stories from the people who lived them.

As these stories became essays and these essays became a book, I realized what made this project special is that we all have felt like a boy at times. I don't mean in terms of gender or sex, but rather we've all felt lonely, we've all felt different.

Sure, this book may be about boys who like other boys, but it's much more than that. It's really about a group of people living their lives and telling their stories. It's about overcoming the odds—and about not overcoming those odds but still being strong enough to get up and give it another try: It's about finding love, wanting love and dealing with what love has done to your life ... and finding beauty in all of that.

And, personally, it's something I wanted in the world to maybe help make that boy you imagined earlier in this column a little less lonely. Because I think it would have helped me many years ago.

ZACH STAFFORD IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR. "BOYS" WILL BE AVAILABLE ONLINE THURSDAY VIA BOOKS, AMAZON AND BARNES & NOBLE. THE BOOK WILL BE AVAILABLE IN PRINT LATER THIS YEAR, AND ALL PROCEEDS ARE BEING DONATED TO THE LAMESDA LITERARY FOUNDATION TO SUPPORT LGBTQ LITERATURE.

YOU FOUND THE PERFECT
CHICAGO APARTMENT!
THERE'S JUST ONE PROBLEM...

LANDLORDS FROM HELL

Christine Wagner, roach problem, Bowmanville
LENNY GILMORE/REDEYE PHOTOS

By Rachel Cromidas | REDEYE

Christine Wagner's first apartment in the city had a roach problem. There were so many, she said, that by month 10 of her lease, she had filled a plastic baggie with their carcasses.

But Wagner's landlord, who managed a Bowmanville apartment building rife with code violations and rarely answered his phone, was unmoved, she said. He sent someone to fumigate the two-bedroom unit once, leaving the wood floors slick with bug spray, but when that didn't work, he started ignoring Wagner.

"It got to be so bad, you'd see them every day, all over the place," she said. "The whole building was infested, but no one had ever really stood up to this guy except me and my roommate."

Chicago's peak apartment hunting and moving season has wound down, and with it the stresses of finding and furnishing a place to live. But even after Chicago's renters have exchanged the first month's rent for their keys and cracked open the Ikea boxes, a new source of anxiety can arise: peculiar, law-flaunting or downright horrible landlords.

The Chicago-based Metropolitan Tenants Organization gets an average of 10,000 calls a year from unhappy tenants around the region whose landlords refuse to do basic maintenance on their units, from fixing a broken refrigerator to keeping the heat on through the winter, according to John Bartlett, the nonprofit's executive director. He said the hotline is busiest in August and the beginning of fall.

"It could be there's a leak, there's mold, broken windows. ... It runs the gamut," he said.

In addition to repairs, the three biggest complaints Bartlett receives are related to evictions, security deposits and rent hikes. Often, he said, tenants are not aware of their rights, so they let small problems go unresolved or use larger problems as an excuse to stop paying rent entirely, which is also illegal.

Bartlett said Chicago's rental protections are strong, but slightly weaker than those in New York and San Francisco, which are two of the most expensive cities to live in but also are places where rent controls and eviction policies give renters more flexibility.

But, he added, at least Chicago renters can report building and unit problems by calling 311—an option that many cities lack.

Katie Goldberg, 23, said she could tolerate some of the problems in her Hyde Park apartment, such as crumbling corkboard in her kitchen cabinets and barless windows exposed to break-ins, even though her landlords almost never responded to complaints. But after subletting her room in a two-bedroom unit on South Ellis Avenue in the summer of 2010, she returned to discover the unit had no hot water.

COVERS! We could print only two—happy Halloween!—but those weren't our

"The only water we had was ice cold," she said. "I told [the landlords] there must be an issue with the boiler, but only after two months of this did I finally get the news that they were replacing the boiler."

Chicago's renting ordinance requires landlords to keep building and unit appliances in working order.

For Emily Heavey, 26, of Avondale, the last straw for her lease on a house in Logan Square came earlier this year, when her landlord put the home up for sale and then changed his phone number. One evening Heavey came home from work to discover that, in an attempt to show the house to prospective buyers, the landlord had kicked down their garage door and left it broken.

"I was like, we keep things there. It's where our bikes go," she said. "And that was two months at least before we were able to move out." The door was never fixed, but Heavey and her roommates were able to end their lease early when the landlord found a home buyer.

When complaining about the cockroaches didn't work for Wagner, 23, she stopped paying the full rent and sent her older brother, Jack Wagner, to City Hall, where he filed dozens upon dozens of complaints, from the rickety elevator that hadn't been inspected since 1996 to the emergency exit that had been chained shut.

"I had a list of all the building violations I found just walking around," he said. "I sat there for like three hours filling out reports."

When it was finally time for Wagner to return her keys and move out, two months early, she dropped a small bag of cockroaches, collected on the apartment's worst days, into the envelope along with the keys. Together they went in the landlord's mailbox, and she never heard from him again.

Wagner, who now lives in Buena Park in an apartment with on-site managers that feels "like heaven" in comparison, said her first rental experience taught her to be more assertive.

"People shouldn't have to settle," she said. "Your home is such a vulnerable place, and you don't want to put it at risk, but you have to remember that you do have rights."

Enjoy the longer autumn

What's the rush? Leaves taking time changing colors

Chicago Tribune

Lovers of fall color might want to relax and kick back this year. The trees are in no hurry to turn, letting us experience what experts call "a protracted fall."

"During some falls we get multiple species all in color at the same time, but this year we are slow getting started and it's going to be more prolonged. You won't get the Kodak moment, where it's all in color on the same day," said Boyce Tankersley of the Chicago Botanic Garden in Glencoe.

Tankersley said fall color is about a week behind schedule after the mild start to autumn, but last week's cooler temps will help plants turn the corner.

"We're a little more subdued compared to some previous years, but if the weather behaves [and] we get warm sunny days and chilly night temps, we'll be good," said Kunso Kim, head of collections and curator at the Morton Arboretum in Lisle. "The trees are waiting. Don't give up hope."

"Winter will be here soon enough."

posed to a quick drop and sudden landing. As long as temperatures gently decline, all will be well, he said.

Moderate, steady rain is expected to last through Thursday, but the Chicago area shouldn't get heavy rains that knock down leaves. Dry weather is predicted for Friday, reports WGN-TV meteorologist Richard Koenigman.

A quick turn to severe cold weather can bring down leaves before they change color, which is what happened to some of the highly sensitive ginkgo trees at the Morton Arboretum that can defoliate in two days with the onset of heavy frost, Kim said.

Meanwhile, the comments keep coming that the fall color hasn't appeared with a dramatic bang, Tankersley said.

"The good news is that just gives us more days to appreciate it," he said. "Winter will be here soon enough."

Cops: Man hit officer he thought was in costume

Chicago Tribune

A Naperville police officer trying to break up a fight was punched over the weekend by a man who thought his uniform was a Halloween costume, according to authorities.

A man and woman who apparently didn't know each other began arguing in a bar near Jefferson Avenue and Washington Street about 1:44 a.m. Sunday, according to Sgt. Lou Cammisio. The altercation continued outside, where friends got involved and the woman's daughter was pushed, landing on her back on Washington Street.

As police tried to intervene, Andres Lopez, 25, of the 400 block of Jackson Street, Aurora, allegedly punched an officer who he later said he believed was wearing a Halloween costume, according to Cammisio. He and Jesus Nino, 24, of the 1200 block of State Street, Aurora, both were cited for fighting, police said.

Officers being mistaken for Halloween partygoers has not been a problem in the past, Cammisio said, and he does not believe any additional safety precautions will be necessary.

It's finally crunch time for Europe-Asia train

5 ISTANBUL Turks intrigued by Istanbul's new underwater rail line linking Europe and Asia are overcrowding trains by riding to and fro under the Bosphorus, forcing closure of one station and causing delays by pressing emergency stop buttons, state railways said.

The service was also hit by a brief power cut in the morning rush hour, prompting television footage of passengers walking through the tunnel next to a stationary train.

Prime Minister Tayyip Erdogan opened the multi-billion dollar Marmaray, an 8-mile tunnel, to great fanfare Tuesday. It is expected eventually to carry some 1.5 million passengers a day under one of the world's busiest waterways.

State rail company TCDD said the service was facing strong demand. It had closed one of its stations to alleviate overcrowding. Some passengers riding the trains for the first time and unfamiliar with the systems had pressed emergency stop buttons, causing delays.

"We expect our passengers to take into account the crowds and to avoid constantly going back and forth if possible to make space for other passengers," it said.

The two bridges and ferry services crossing the Bosphorus are heavily crowded with commuters in Europe's biggest city.

Government critics say the opening of the tunnel, one of Erdogan's "mega projects" designed to change the face of Turkey, was rushed to coincide with Tuesday's 90th anniversary of the founding of the modern Turkish republic.

ROSE = HOPE

In Englewood, The Return is about more than just a game

Bryan Crawford

redeyesports@tribune.com
@BryanCraw4D

Winters in Englewood always seem a little colder than anywhere else in the city. Buried underneath all the snow and ice lies a foundational feeling of situational hopelessness and desperation.

But when it comes to Derrick Rose, while some may have an aversion to calling him a role model or a hero in a place like Englewood, where he's from, he's certainly both those things. He's also a beacon of hope for many who live there.

For adults, there exists a sense of pride that Rose is "one of ours." And for the kids, well, they know D-Rose once grew up under the same circumstances, giving them hope they could one day be successful too, and not necessarily in sports.

Truth is, the entire community has just as much of a desire to see him succeed as Adidas or even the Bulls.

So when Rose went down with a torn ACL in April 2012, you can bet the spirits of many men, women, sons and daughters of his old neighborhood were crushed. And you can also bet that once "The Return" campaign rolled out, no one was more excited than the residents of the place that Rose once called home.

Almost 18 months since his injury, we've seen him on the court in videos from his overseas tours, during practice and during the preseason.

But many Englewood residents can't afford to buy tickets to a Bulls

BULLS VS. NEW YORK
7 p.m. Thursday, TNT game, or are even fortunate enough to have cable TV, a computer or Internet access.

That just makes the winter days in Englewood even gloomier.

So while we're all disappointed that Rose waited so long to suit up again for the Bulls, no one was more disappointed than the residents of Englewood. In a place that robs people of opportunity daily, imagine the sadness of being robbed of an opportunity to cheer for one of your own.

And if that seems overly dramatic to you, well, it's an Englewood thing, and you just wouldn't understand.

Midseason fantasy MVPs: Who ya got?

FANTASY FIX

Dan Richman

» redeyesports@tribune.com
» @danrichmanffl

It's time again to hand out midseason fantasy MVPs. Of course, Peyton Manning tops the list, but let the debate begin on the other choices. I can take it.

Quarterback: Peyton Manning, Denver
Manning is taking fantasy quarterback play to a whole new level. His start has been simply awesome: more than 2,900 passing yards already and 29 touchdowns in only half a season. He's putting up numbers that are unimaginable. In his 16th season, Manning seems to be getting better, and he could do even more in the second half of the year.

Running back: Marshawn Lynch, Seattle

Going into the year, you would have thought Adrian Peterson, Arian Foster, Trent Richardson or Doug Martin would be a lock for this award. But no, it goes to the man who is always in "Beast Mode." Lynch continues to dominate, despite a blip against subpar St. Louis. Here's why he gets the award: seven touchdowns in eight games, and averaging 75 yards per game. Lynch continues to be a workhorse.

Wide receiver: Calvin Johnson, Detroit
I know I wrote a column last week singing the praises of other wide receivers. However, Calvin Johnson's performance last week against Dallas changed everything. Johnson is battling a bad knee and still coming up huge. The stats are also huge: 821 receiving yards and seven touchdowns in seven games. There are many receivers having great years, but Johnson is in a class by himself.

Tight end: Jimmy Graham, New Orleans
Coach Sean Payton being back on the sidelines seems to be sitting well with Jimmy Graham. After an average 2012 season, Graham is on fire this year. The stats are great: 630 yards receiving and eight touchdowns in seven games. He is battling a foot injury but should be able to produce the rest of the way.

1	What sports figure would you dress up as for Halloween?	Craig Sager. He thinks every day is dress-up day at work.	Birdman or Dennis Rodman—one and the same.	I'd go as Zombie Bill Wirtz and scare people by saying I'm trading Toews and Kane.	Drew Brees-us Christ!	#NFLQB I would love to be #overhyped and #overpaid.
2	Who's the scariest Chicago athlete right now?	I don't know, but he's definitely on the Blackhawks. Their feet are deadly blades!	The creepy crawly things in Joakim Noah's hair bun.	Khabibulin, in that I get the hee-bie-jeebies when he's in net.	Gotta be Joakim Noah. That hair ... bleh!	Shea McClellin is scary awful.
3	If you had a sign for Derrick Rose's United Center return Thursday, what would it say?	"We still cool on free Giordano's for life like you promised? The stores stopped taking my calls."	"Call me at 312-2-" ... never mind.	"I don't trust the Bulls' doctors, either."	"Rose Before Hoes"	#1+6rings=7th
4	How does one measure basketball IQ?	Quote every line from "Blue Chips" while playing Shaq in 1-on-1. May not help, couldn't hurt.	Can you spell H-O-R-S-E?	Take the circumference of a basketball, subtract the circumference of your head and then multiply by 100.	Take the square root of a lateral surface area, multiply that by the jump discontinuity, subtract a binomial, divide by 2.5 and add 1.	Basketball IQ = percent increase in June wins vs. Heat.
5	If Jay Cutler returns early from his groin injury ...	... the Bears will still be the seventh-best team in the NFC. Sad but true.	... we know Kristin did her job.	... The Cubs briefly put up a mock-up "Wrigley Field" sign in right field Wednesday that did not satisfy rooftop owners. ARTIST RENDERING

No backing down

Wrigley sign test fails to satisfy rooftop owners

Chicago Tribune

The Cubs on Wednesday briefly put a mock-up sign in right field in a test run designed to allay fears of the owners of nearby rooftop clubs with lucrative views into the park.

A horizontal sign meant to mimic the 650-square-foot script advertising sign already approved by Mayor Emanuel and the City Council went up in the morning. The sign—which read "Wrigley Field," not giving away the name of the hoped-for advertiser—came down quickly, a team spokesman confirmed.

The display was meant to show rooftop club owners how their views would be affected if the right field wall was moved back 15 feet, as planned, and the sign was put up. Cubs spokesman Julian Green said the clubs still would have views into the stadium but conceded they would "not likely" be the same full views they now enjoy.

The reaction from the rooftop camp did not waver.

"We've been crystal clear, any sign that blocks the views of the rooftops will result in legal action," said Ryan McLaughlin, spokesman for the rooftop club owners. "This violates a contract, a contract the Cubs have with every rooftop owner."

McLaughlin was referring to a revenue-sharing agreement between rooftop owners and the team that expires at the end of 2023.

The Ricketts family, which wants to renovate the park at a cost of about $300 million and to redevelop the surrounding neighborhood at a cost of about $200 million, has declared it won't start until the rooftops agree not to file a lawsuit over blocked views.

Time to renew your lease

Good news for two of Derrick Rose's backcourt running mates. The Bulls announced Wednesday that they've picked up contract options on Marquis Teague and Jimmy Butler, so they'll both be with the team through 2014-15.

and "Dangerously Delicious," which are available on Netflix.

"This time it was kind of heavier things dealing with, you know, life and babies and marriage and stuff," he said, adding that as he hit 30 he was grappling with the gravity of the "adult world." He couldn't imagine getting married, let alone being a father.

Ansari answered questions about the special, working with Netflix, "Parks and Recreation" and what he would do if he wasn't making people laugh. "I would just be a chubby Indian man living in a mediocre town somewhere," he cracked.

I think he'd still be making people laugh.

Do you feel Netflix maybe offers you more creative freedom?

Well, all of my stand-up specials, I've never felt any kind of burden creatively as far as trying to contain myself or anything. So with stand-up, I don't ever feel that; I've never felt about any of the specials.

I was struck by how personal this particular special was, especially the first half where you're talking about family and love. Were you working out some issues on stage?

Well, it just kind of came about organically. I kind of write stand-up about whatever is kind of going on in my life, whatever is in my head. ... And that's just kind of what happened, and I ended up writing the special mostly about that stuff.

You make a joke about child molesters in the special. How do you decide how far you can push the envelope, and do you think people are more sensitive or less sensitive now to stuff that's considered taboo?

I think you have to take that all case by case. Any joke I do, I kind of do a case-

'PARKS AND REC' STAR EXPLORES ADULTHOOD IN NETFLIX COMEDY SPECIAL

Tom Haverford, Aziz Ansari's character on NBC's "Parks and Recreation," lost a bit of his swagger recently when "Orphan Black" star Tatianna Maslany guest starred as Nadia, a doctor who makes Tom swoon.

Tom's loss of confidence as he clumsily tried to woo Nadia aligns with the fearful attitude Ansari addresses in his latest stand-up special, "Buried Alive." As a man pushing 30, Ansari ruminates about becoming an adult, babies, marriage and other long-term relationships. The special, which was filmed live at the Merriam Theater in Philadelphia during the show's tour, will debut Friday on Netflix.

During a recent conference call with reporters, Ansari talked about how different "Buried Alive" is from his previous comedy specials, "Intimate Moments for a Sensual Evening"

Aziz Ansari
REDEYE ILLUSTRATION

by-case to see if it makes sense, you know? That joke, I'm sure if you paraphrase or took things out of context, you'd make me look like a horrible person. But ultimately that joke's about how I'd be scared to have a kid. ... That's just a scary thought to me, how parents just let their kids run around in the mall by themselves and things like that. The root of that joke is about that and ultimately it's an anti-child-molester joke. You can't really worry about the pro-child-molester people getting mad about that, right?

In "Buried Alive" you talk a lot about what it's like to grow older. So now that you've been 30 for more than half a year, do you find yourself changing some of your viewpoints on adulthood and parenthood?

Yeah, definitely my views have changed a little bit here and there, but I generally still have that fear. But I think I'm more comfortable with just kind of the idea of like, "Oh, it's totally fine if I want to wait and do this stuff later in life."

What do you miss most about being in your 20s?

Nothing. It's the same. I mean, I guess just saying you're in your 20s is the only thing I miss, being able to say you're in your 20s.

How has being on "Parks and Recreation" helped your stand-up career, or how has the stand-up career helped "Parks and Recreation?" How did the two fit together in your career?

I kind of see them as both separate entities. Whenever I do stand-up, I feel like those are people that know my stand-up; there might be some overlap with "Parks" fans. But when I did my first theater tour, if I mentioned someone like my cousin Harris or something, like everyone would respond, so I think that means that they've seen the stand-up. I don't feel there are many people that are seeing "Parks" and then they're like, "Oh, let me spend X amount of dollars to see this guy do stand-up. Maybe he's funny."

Was the character on "Parks and Rec" written for you?

Yes. It was written for me. I was cast before the rest of the show. So, yes, they wrote it for me. And all of the characters on that show, the writers and producers have gotten better at writing toward us and they grab elements from our real life. For example, I really do listen to some dumb rap music the way Tom does, and Nick Offerman really does have a wood shop the way Ron does.

You started stand-up back when you were at NYU. How have you seen it change?

Well, to me it's just crazy just seeing everyone I've come up succeed and go on to all these bigger careers and stuff. ... It's just amazing to see how everyone has kind of moved on and now they're the faces you see all over TV and everything.

Any good story about the hecklers or etiquette about how you deal with hecklers?

Heckling is kind of an antiquated notion, to be honest. Whenever I do shows, there's never like a, "Oh, you suck!" It's more kind of, either someone's really drunk and they just like talking with friends and being rude, or people trying to videotape. It's more modern things like that.

Comics talk about how important podcasting is to their careers now. If you were starting out today, would that be your vehicle toward getting recognitions?

I don't know. All that stuff is a distraction too—Twitter, YouTube, all the stuff. I feel like young comedians coming up now, they're like, "Oh, I got to start making videos and I got to maintain a Twitter presence." I think that is probably doing more harm than good because when I was coming up all I really cared about was being really good at stand-up. I hope that stuff's not, like, making people take focus away from the basic art of doing stand-up.

New series breathes life into the undead

SHOW PATROL

Curt
Wagner

■ @showpatrol

Forgive me while I pick up my jaw off the floor. I've been sitting stunned while powering through "The Returned," the French creep show debuting, appropriately, Halloween night on Sundance. Don't miss it. It's the most thoughtful and thought-provoking series I've watched this year.

You just know things are going to get strange when within the first five minutes a once-dead butterfly breaks free of the glass case in which it has been carefully displayed. Yet that beautiful image comes only after a bus carrying dozens of schoolchildren and their teachers inexplicably drives off a steep cliff in the mountains of France.

Based on the 2004 film "Les Revenants," this eight-episode, subtitled series has been called a zombie tale because many of its characters, deceased but differing in age and dates of death, somehow return to an idyllic mountain town and attempt to carry on their lives. They're a bit confused, famished and unable to sleep, but otherwise they show no signs of zombie-like decay or a desire to eat human flesh.

In other words, they're not your traditional zombies of schlock movies or "The Walking Dead." Director and co-writer Fabrice Gobert isn't interested in gruesome zombie attacks or skull-crushing zombie deaths. The shocks he delivers are more cerebral, but no less powerful.

Gobert explores the grief and loss felt when someone close to us is taken too soon and what happens when everything we thought we knew about life and death is upended when they reappear.

"Our existence is not limited to our time on Earth," says Pierre (Jean-Francois Sivadier), who runs the Helping Hands shelter. He wants to comfort with the words, but it sounds more like a warning.

Like many characters, Pierre keeps a stunning secret. Those secrets are slowly and unnervingly revealed to a haunting score by Scottish band Mogwai.

Each episode is titled after a character. The premiere, "Camille," follows one of the bus accident victims (Yara Pilartz) and examines the effect her return has on her parents (Anne

Yara Pilartz

The Returned

8 p.m. Thursday, Sundance

Consigny; Frederic Pierrot), who want to hide her lest someone find out about their miracle, and sister, Lena (Jenna Thiam), who reacts with equal parts revulsion, anger and fear.

There's also Simon (Pierre Perrier), who was killed 10 years previously on the way to his wedding, now searching for his then-fiancee, Adele (Cloilde Hesme), who is engaged to a local police captain. An eerie child (Swann Nambotin) won't talk, but when he follows Julie (Celine Sallette) home, strange things begin to happen. Years ago, Julie was the only victim to survive a string of brutal murders which have now begun again, suggesting the killer has returned from the dead.

As more people return to the living, the water level behind a local dam begins to drop, an unexplained phenomenon that compounds the atmosphere of dread and unease.

I don't want to give away too many specifics because the individual stories crisscross in intricate, sinister and spectacular ways. I'm not even sure "The Returned" will provide a solid conclusion, or whether it leaves us with a cliffhanger to be revealed in the already-ordered second season.

I have no doubt I'll be satisfied with either. After all, there may not be answers to the questions posed by "The Returned"—at least not easy ones.

A Manhattan made with BroVo amaro at Sable Kitchen & Bar

bartenders' secret

Amaro might be the hottest liqueur you've never heard of

By Kate Bernot | REDEYE

Averna. Fernet Branca. Cynar. If you've ordered a drink at a craft cocktail bar in the past few months, you've likely seen one of these ingredients on the menu—but do you know what you're drinking?

The bitter liqueurs have been favorites of bartenders for years, but this category of spirit, called amaro, only hovers on the edge of mainstream popularity.

One reason: the characteristically bitter taste.

"If you grew up in our modern American drinking culture, which has a lot to do with refreshment, you tend to get taken aback a little bit [by amaro]," said Mike Ryan, head bartender at Sable Kitchen & Bar in River North, who recently bottled his own recipe for amaro with BroVo Spirits.

Botanical and sometimes quite sharp, amaro isn't going to become most people's go-to spirit. But as more Chicago bars incorporate these spirits into cocktails and stock a wider range of bottles, even skeptics may be converted.

"There's so many amaros out there that there's got to be at least one for everybody to like," said Ronnie Higgins, bar manager at The Revel Room in Wicker Park, which stocks well-known amaro brands such as Fernet Branca and Cynar along with more obscure bottles such as Fernet-Vallet and Amaro Braulio.

The spectrum ranges from the sweet, mint flavors of Fernet Branca Menta to the lush fruitiness of Montenegro to the smooth, maple notes in Averna.

Ken Zawacki, head bartender at Maria's Packaged Goods & Community Bar in Bridgeport, said newbies shouldn't be turned off just because the flavors of amari are unfamiliar. "I think you have to have an open mind and don't immediately dismiss it just because you haven't tasted anything like it before," he said.

Most people would describe their first sip of an amaro as herbal or even medicinal. "It's a bit of an acquired taste," Ryan said, putting it very mildly.

This distinct flavor isn't surprising, given amaro's medicinal past. Originally developed in Italy, amari still owe their tastes to the combination of herbs, roots and spices that make up each recipe. "They were medicinal remedies designed to alleviate symptoms of

Amaro at Sable

stomachache, the common cold, whatever," Ryan said. "Mostly, they're really good at alleviating sobriety."

Because they've been known to relieve fullness and help settle the stomach, amari often are consumed as digestifs or after-dinner drinks. (From personal experience, I can attest that a shot of Fernet Branca at the end of the night will leave you feeling much better the next morning than a shot of whiskey would have.)

Zawacki said he's noticed that amaro is a popular order at Maria's among guests who have just filled up on savory pies at next-door Pleasant House Bakery.

"A perception of bitterness is evolutionarily tied to something that's poisonous or toxic. It does send certain signals to the body," Ryan echoed. "It gets your digestive system kicked up to overdrive to start processing whatever's in there."

But sipping an amaro post-meal isn't the only way to enjoy the spirit; it's also become more popular as a cocktail ingredient to balance sweeter flavors.

Like manhattans? Dip your toes into the waters by asking your bartender to substitute an amaro for the sweet vermouth and bitters in that classic cocktail, or try Sable's Cynar julep made with Cynar, grapefruit juice, sugar and mint. Once you've developed a preference for the stuff, dive head-first into the Windsor Knot cocktail at Maria's Packaged Goods & Community Bar, which is an anise-heavy blend of Averna, Fernet Branca, whiskey and Angostura bitters.

If you're still skeptical, Ryan offers this bit of perspective: "As with everything spirit-related, just don't be afraid. There's things out there that are actually dangerous or that could kill you. There's famine in [bleeping] Africa. Amaro is not something to be afraid of."

3 TREATS WE CAN'T STOP THINKING ABOUT

Banh xeo ($8) at Hai Yen 1055 W. Argyle St. 773-561-4077

Any dish that forces me to deviate from my standard pre-pho spring roll order must be special. Case in point: this crispy rice flour crepe, folded in half because it can barely contain all the pork, shrimp and bean sprouts stuffed inside. It's savory and salty on its own, but the sweet-tangy lime sauce sets it over the top. I'd suggest splitting this delightfully oily wonder between two people—after all, you should have pho coming. KATE BERNOT

Mushroom pate ($12) at CH Distillery

564 W. Randolph St. 312-707-8780
At most restaurants, anything with the word "pate" in it is most definitely for carnivores. By definition, these spreads are made from ground-up meat and fat that's cooked to a deliciously smooth consistency. This new West Loop distillery and bar gives vegetarians their own version of pate, made from meaty shiitake mushrooms and served on rounds of rye bread. The latest garnishes include macerated figs and slivers of pickled banana peppers, which give the whole thing a nice bite. P.S. I am equally obsessed with the cloth bar napkins here. LISA ARNETT

Spiced pumpkin gelatte ($3.59) at Paciugo 2009 W. Roscoe St. 773-661-9519; 3241 N. Broadway 773-248-8433; 2324 West Giddings St. 773-989-1926

At first blush, the combination of a warm latte and cold gelato may not sound terribly appealing, but this gelato shop (with three locations) has created a surprisingly delicious mashup that mixes frothed milk, potent espresso and sweet, creamy pumpkin gelato that's made in-house. The result is a silky blend with subtle flavors of pumpkin and a bit of cinnamon that perfectly meld with the coffee without overpowering it. It easily bests Starbucks' Pumpkin Spice Latte, which can have a cloying aftertaste. Available through Nov. 27. TRIBUNE

HEATHER CHARLES/TRIBUNE

Step into wrestler's reality show ring

ABOUT LAST NIGHT

Luis
Gomez

» lgomez@tribune.com
» @aboutluisgomez

The producers of Tru TV's "Hardcore Pawn: Chicago" are hoping to turn pro wrestler and restaurant owner Lisa Marie Varon's unusual career path into a reality TV show.

The series would revolve around Varon and her Lincoln Park restaurant, The Squared Circle. Cameras began rolling Sunday when The Squared Circle hosted patrons for WWE's Hell in a Cell pay-per-view and are expected to return a few more times to film.

The pizza and gourmet burgers restaurant opened in March and has attracted its share of colorful wrestling personalities. Kevin Nash, Diamond Dallas Page, The Honky Tonk Man, Rikishi, Lance Storm, Rhyno, Molly Holly, Alicia Fox and Maria Kanellis have all stopped by.

It was Kanellis who got into a verbal altercation with Varon two weeks ago at The Squared Circle to promote their appearance

A WRESTLER'S LIFE

Should her reality show get picked up, Lisa Marie Varon would join a long list of wrestlers who have ventured into the genre, including Hulk Hogan, The Rock, "Stone Cold" Steve Austin, Chris Jericho, Stacy Keibler, Trish Stratus and The Bella Twins, among others.

at Ring of Honor's Glory By Honor at Frontier Fieldhouse in Chicago Ridge.

Varon—who went by the name Victoria in WWE and Tira in TNA—has been more hands-on with The Squared Circle than your typical celebrity restaurant owner. She is there on an almost nightly basis greeting guests. Varon previously owned a gyro stand in Lombard and a pizzeria in Louisville, Ky.

American Mass Media filmed the original sizzle reel for "Hardcore Pawn: Chicago"—based on Royal Pawn Shop in the South Loop—and is shooting The Squared Circle pilot. I'm told they're focusing on developing more Chicago-based TV shows. Former World Championship Wrestling president Eric Bischoff is an executive producer on "Hardcore Pawn: Chicago" but is not involved with the Varon pilot. FOR MORE CELEB NEWS FROM CHICAGO, GO TO CHICAGOTRIBUNE.COM/LUIS

DO YOU SNORE? ARE YOU OFTEN TIRED?

If you have sleep apnea, you may qualify to participate in a clinical research study investigating a new drug treatment for sleep apnea.

Obstructive sleep apnea is associated with increased risk for cardiovascular disease, diabetes, daytime sleepiness and motor vehicle accidents. Treatment of sleep apnea is currently limited to surgery or medical device. A Clinical trial is underway at the Northwestern University and Northwestern Memorial Hospital evaluating an investigational drug therapy for the treatment of sleep apnea. If you are between the ages of 21 and 64, and have obstructive sleep apnea, you may be eligible to participate in this 8 week study. Eligible study participants may receive study-related medical examinations and study drug or placebo at no cost. Study participants will also be compensated for their time and travel.

To learn more about this research study or to find out if you qualify for screening, please call 312-503-1948 or 312 908-1024.

Are you Experiencing NEW BACK PAIN?

Are you interested in testing
a new treatment?

Northwestern University researchers are conducting a clinical research trial of a new drug for the treatment of acute back pain.

Participation in this study will require 7 visits over 6 months, including 2 MRI scans.

Eligible participants must:

- Be 18 years or older
- Have low back pain that starts
less than 12 weeks ago
- No back pain in the past
- Be able to undergo an MRI
(no pacemakers, any metal implants)

Qualified volunteers will receive study-related doctor visits, lab services and study medication free of charge if they are in a group receiving drugs. Compensation and parking reimbursement will be provided.

If you or someone you know might be interested in participating in this study, please contact us as soon as possible.

BIG-SCREEN BLIND SPOT HALLOWEEN EDITION
'TALES FROM THE HOOD'

By Jessica Gallart | REDEYE

Once in a while, a movie slips under your radar. For about, oh, 20 years. We sit down with those “classic” horror movies everybody but us has seen and give them the nostalgia critic treatment.

Confession: Last year, RedEye staffers discussed their favorite scary moments from horror and Halloween movies. One in particular generated some animated discussion in the newsroom. Until recently, I had never seen the 1995 horror anthology “Tales from the Hood,” executive produced by Spike Lee and featuring four black culture-themed shorts framed by a narrative of three drug dealers trying to buy “found” drugs from a wacky storytelling funeral director.

Had I seen it in 1995 at the age of 8:

Grounded immediately. Not only is the language more than salty (I still get a bit of a shock when I hear the N-word used as much as it is in this movie), but the gory special effects and use of monsters, zombies and inanimate-objects-come-to-life to eat your racist flesh would have quite literally made me crap the bed as an 8 year old.

Now: Anthologies and those centered on social commentary are my favorite horror films, and this one delivers, both as a classic horror flick and as a pop-culture movie with a message. Stories about realities in the black community such as child abuse, police brutality, gang violence and racist politicians are turned on their head and repackaged as psychological, supernatural thrillers. A man being beaten to death by white cops isn't horrifying enough? Let's turn the victim into a vengeful zombie who returns to decapitate and crucify his killers. A racist white politician moves into a former plantation house and disrespects the slaves who died there? Let's use nightmarish puppetry and animation to send droves of small black dolls to kill him by eating his flesh.

What I expected to be a campy 1990s horror-comedy, maybe even a parody of flicks like "Tales from the Crypt" and "Creepshow," is one of the most original and well-executed entries in the classic horror anthology genre. Some of the stories stand out much more, but the messaging is consistent, the targets are balanced and the "Twilight Zone"-esque ending wraps it up neatly.

Must be noted: The final story (which leads into the conclusion of the narrative) about nightmarish psychological experiments done on gang members who have shot and killed innocents, hits a little too close to home considering the violence rates in Chicago almost 20 years later.

One female entrepreneur to another

Blue Sky

Nicole Yeary spent 10 years selling health insurance by telephone, learning to navigate the complex pathways of the health care landscape. The job didn't last after the economy tanked, but the knowledge she gained about how to get the right medical coverage seemed more pertinent and valuable than ever.

An entrepreneur at heart, Yeary crafted a plan to build an online business that matched customers to health plans, and she set out to find venture capitalists and other investors. They didn't seem interested.

"I couldn't get in front of them," Yeary said.

Since several male-dominated teams did, Yeary in 2010 found a newer calling: preparing other women for those moments of truth when their experience matched business opportunities. She founded what is now ms-tech.co as a Facebook group with seven other people.

Three years later, Yeary said, it counts 700 members and faces growing pains.

As it tries to help other women in business leap the small-business fence, Ms. Tech is tackling many of the challenges female entrepreneurs say they face the most: how to find funding, how to scale a start-up into a mid-size company and how to expand their services.

In its early stages, Ms. Tech provided safe forums for women to talk to one another about the technical software each found helpful; how to focus, position and finance an idea; and whom to contact to find potential partners. They did matchmaking and organized events around some of the hot topics.

Yeary and co-founder Lisa Russell said those events became a revenue source. But as opportunities grow, they're talking to possible investors and tinkering with the business model.

Russell said the experience has been rewarding—even delightfully meta. As Ms. Tech sought a board of advisors, Russell and Yeary realized their growing pains might be instructive to others.

"As we went through the process, it occurred to us that we should blog about it," Russell said. "Why not build out the resources to help other women do it after us?"

According to the National Women's Business Council, the U.S. has more than 7.8 million women-owned businesses, and their ranks have grown twice as fast in the last decade as male-owned firms.

But the women's business council and a U.S. Census survey of business owners in 2007 identified a funding gap: 27 percent of women use their life savings to expand their businesses, while 11.6 percent of them underwrite the expansion with credit cards. Only 4 percent used bank loans, the survey found.

The statistic evokes the frustration that propelled Yeary to start Ms. Tech.

"There are women out there doing really awesome things," Yeary said. "How can we help them realize them?"

Oh, the horrors!

CAN YOU BELIEVE THIS TERRIFYING HOLLYWOOD GOSSIP?

Now that we're adults, the scariest thing that happens on Halloween is the drugstore across the street running out of Reese's pumpkins. (No, we haven't bought ours yet.) But in the celebrity world, something else creepy this way comes. Each of these juicy pieces of news actually happened in the days leading up to Allhallow's Eve. We ranked them on their fear factor from "that part in 'Scream' when Rose McGowan gets crushed in the garage door" to "that part in 'Silence of the Lambs' with the night-vision goggles." DAMORAN@TRIBUNE.COM | @REDEYEDANA

Kerry Washington ... is pregnant

The only scary part about this one is that it might affect her screen time on "Scandal"! People magazine's best-dressed woman was secretly married four months ago to football star Nnamdi Asomugha, and her pregnancy was confirmed by usweekly.com, which we hope we can believe, because this is going to be one gorgeous baby.

Channing Tatum is producing a reality show ... about burlesque dancers

Charming Tatum had us at shirtless every single time. And now he's just keeping that "Magic Mike" money train rolling with A&E, setting up an hourlong series about New Orleans burlesque club Saints and Sinners. variety.com reports. Also, Tatum is a part-owner of said club, which we ALSO did not realize.

Guy Fieri got into a physical brawl ... with his hairstylist

Easily one of the best parts of watching "Diners, Drive-Ins and Dives" is seeing what level Guy Fieri's roots are at in any given episode. Maybe that's the basis of his fight Saturday with stylist Ariel Ramirez at an airport in San Francisco. According to eonline.com, both kicks and mean words were thrown, leaving Ramirez in tears.

John Mayer inspired the Katy Perry song ... 'Legendary Lovers'

Gross. At least she looks really cute on the cover of Entertainment Weekly with a bunch of shirtless dudes.

Kristin Cavallari is pregnant ... with her second child

It ain't an "oops" if it happens twice, folks. Kristin confirmed the pregnancy on her Instagram account Wednesday, after telling eonline.com that "before Camden was born, I thought I'd be pregnant again by the time he was six months." Looks like she waited a little longer—Jay Cutler's little dude is 14 months old. No comment from the dad-to-be.

Joe no

Answer to a question none of you were asking: No, Joe Jonas does not have a drug problem. After accusations swirled following the Jonas Brothers' split, he said "It's obviously not true. I've never touched heroin in my life," according to Perez Hilton. Obviously. But because we're not rabid Jo-Bro fans, the real news to us today is that Joe's girlfriend is named Blanda Eggenschwiler. Blanda. Eggenschwiler.

'Community' chest

Attempting to keep its ship afloat after the pillaging of Chevy Chase and Donald Glover from the cast, "Community" has announced even more guest stars for the upcoming season, thewrap.com reports. "Arrested Development" creator Mitch Hurwitz and "Tim and Eric" stars Tim Heidecker and Eric Wareheim will join new and returning guests like Nathan Fillion, John Oliver, LeVar Burton, Brie Larson, Ben Folds, Paget Brewster, and Rob Corddry. OK, we guess we'll come to class.

AHOY, MATEY!

GETTY IMAGES

For those of you wondering how the hell Prince Harry is still single, here's another incentive: His future wife gets a cruise ship. After Duchess Catherine christened the Royal Princess ship from Princess Cruises, Capt. Fred Draper told eonline.com that having Harry's future wife christen one of her own "sounds like an excellent idea!" Right now, Cressida Bonas is in the lead for that role, but it's any woman's game, ladies.

THE DIGIT

286,000

That's how many copies of Katy Perry's "Prism" sold in its first week, shooting it to No. 1 on the Billboard 200. It's her second first-place debut, and also the largest sales week this year for a woman. Miley Cyrus' "Bangerz" was second, natch.

Making plans

"12 Years a Slave" director Steve McQueen is taking steps toward a new screen. The Brit is developing a show with HBO about a young black man weaving his mysterious past into New York's high society, thr.com reports. He's also co-writing the script alongside "World War Z" writer Matthew Michael Carnahan. Along with all the awards buzz for "Slave," it sounds like he'll have a busy fall.

“I always feel like an album is finished when it sounds like Toronto.”

—Drake, in a super-emo promotional video for the Toronto Raptors. ICYMI, he recently was named the team's global ambassador, which we assume also means he gets full access to the T-shirt cannon any time he asks.
